DPHHS Urges Public To Use Caution When Consuming Morel Mushrooms

Improper Identification, Storage, And Preparation Of Morels May Lead To Illness, Death

For the Courier

Spring in Montana is a popular time to forage for morel mushrooms, a type of mushroom that is often considered a delicacy by restaurants and the public. However, morels can cause human illness if the proper identification, storage, and preparation steps are not taken.

An outbreak of gastrointestinal (GI) illness occurred in Montana in the spring of 2023, when 51 people got sick after eating raw or only partially cooked morels at a restaurant.

Three hospitalizations and two deaths were associated with this outbreak. Those who became ill experienced symptoms including diarrhea, nausea, and stomach pain. People became sick shortly after consuming the morels, typically within one hour after the restaurant meal.

While outbreaks and illnesses linked to the consumption of morels may seem rare, it is possible they occur more frequently than public health professionals or medical providers realize because symptoms may not be severe enough to cause individuals to seek care.

Furthermore, a lack of awareness about the potential for morels to cause GI illness may also contribute to instances being underreported. The consumption of morels, whether prepared raw or cooked to varying degrees, has been linked to other GI outbreaks in the past.

State public health officials want to remind Montanans of a few safety tips they should utilize if they choose to forage for, buy, or consume morel mushrooms: Make sure the mushrooms you plan to consume are true morels. If you are not an expert in identifying morels, consult someone who is.

Choose morels that are dry and firm. Avoid those that are bruised or slimy.

Practice safe storage methods. Store morels in breathable packaging such as a paper bag at a temperature of 40° F or below. Avoid using plastic bags for storage, because plastic bags cause the mushrooms to “sweat,” which promotes growth of bacteria and molds.

Cook morels thoroughly before eating. Cooking likely reduces toxin levels present in the mushrooms. Consuming raw or partially cooked morels may lead to varying degrees of GI illness, or even death.

If you get sick after eating morel mushrooms, contact your healthcare provider immediately and/or call the Poison Control Hotline at 1-800-222-1222. Healthcare providers should report any suspected morel mushroom or other poisonings to their local or tribal health department.

For more information, DPHHS has created a new web page on morel mushrooms at <https://dphhs.mt.gov/public-health/cdepi/diseases/Morel-Mushrooms>.

Montana Wildlife & Transportation Partnership Project Program Spring 2024

For the Courier

The Spring Application Cycle for project proposals to Montana Wildlife & Transportation Partnership opened May 1, 2024

The Montana Wildlife and Transportation Partnership (MWTP or Partnership) is a collaborative group of representatives from the Montana Department of Transportation (MDT), Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks (FWP), and Montanans for Safe Wildlife Passage (MSWP). Formed in 2019, the Partnership recognized that reducing Wildlife Vehicle Collisions (WVC) and improving connectivity means finding ways to accommodate wildlife movement across highways.

The Project Program launched by MWTP last year is a statewide project application process for the public to propose collaborative, stand-alone wildlife accommodation projects within the state’s highway infrastructure. MWTP is excited to announce the opening of the third application cycle beginning on May 1, and closing May 31, 2024.

During the November 2023 cycle, the Project Program received two applications. The Partnership is excited to announce one of these applications is moving forward into a Feasibility Study sponsored by MDT.

Collaboration will be essential to focus public-private resources as groups prepare applications for the Project Program. The application process requires coordination, time, and investment. Throughout 2023, the Partnership provided resources, webinars, and communications to assist potential applicants in understanding the Program and the application requirements. Please visit the MWTP webpage at www.mdt.mt.gov/pubinvolve/mwtp/ to be sure you have the latest information. Potential applicants are encouraged to contact Partnership members through the Contact Us link (mdtmwtp@mt.gov) on the website to ask questions and seek assistance specific to their project proposal and application.

The on-line fillable Application Form is available on the MWTP website. Once an application is received, MWTP will evaluate project proposals and select stand-alone wildlife accommodation projects that reduce WVCs and improve safe wildlife passage across Montana highways. MWTP will then support selected applicants through the study and development phases.

MWTP is eager to receive your project applications! Consult with local FWP or MDT biologists and focus on partnerships, information sharing, and finer scale data gathering to support purpose, need, benefit, and proposed solutions in your application. Working together to leverage information, capacity, and resources, will allow more good work through collaboration to address wildlife and transportation challenges in Montana.
